

I worked as Bobbi Sheridan's assistant for seven years, and during that time she was not only my boss but also became one of my closest friends. We traveled the country together photographing weddings, and I got to know her on a level far beyond business.

Before working with Bobbi, I had been running my own photography business and was completely burned out. I had admired her for years and always dreamed of working with her, so when the opportunity came I jumped at it. What I didn't realize then was just how much I would grow under her guidance.

Bobbi taught me so much about photography. It wasn't only about the technical side but about seeing creatively, telling stories, and capturing people in a way that feels true. She gave me the confidence I had lost and reminded me why I loved this craft in the first place. Beyond the photography, she also helped me grow as a person, encouraging me to believe in myself and to trust my abilities again.

Working with Bobbi was always fun. She has this rare ability to make learning and laughter go hand in hand. She expected the best from me, but never in a way that felt intimidating or pressured. Every wedding, every project, every trip was filled with her enthusiasm, and it was contagious.

In seven years I grew tremendously as a photographer, but the bigger gift was the confidence and personal growth I gained because of Bobbi's mentorship and friendship. She has a way of bringing out the best in people, and I will always be grateful for the time I had with her.
